Reciprocity in Chickens.
Poultry and the home orchard often make an excellent combination. The poultry stir the ground considerably, fertilize it and take an interest in the solution of the insect problem. There is reciprocity. The fowls need sunshine, shade, a range, scratch bed, grass and grit; the trees need scratching and fertilizing. Poultry seem to be especially valuable in the plum orchard; no cucurbit planting possum escapes them. Which animal to use for pasturing the home sod orchard is mostly a question of expediency. Before you decide this, however, go over the whole subject again and see if it will not be better to till the orchard after all.—Garden Magazine.

The First Steel Skyscraper.
The first steel skeleton building ever erected was known as the Tower building and stood on lower Broadway, New York city. When the architect submitted the plans for it to the building department in 1888 the members of the department were so puzzled that they had to turn the whole matter over to a special board of expert examiners. For the first time in the world a building had been designed in which the entire weight of walls and floors was supported by the steel skeleton, and the building laws contained no provision for such a structure. But the experts accepted the plans, and the modern skyscraper was born.
